DISTRICTS, MUNICIPALITIES, AND HSIENS

Ko Sui-ch'eng

50X1-HUM

As a result of the long struggle, our entire country, except Tibet and Taiwan, has been liberated and the People's government has been firmly established. To facilitate administration and to meet the requirements for future reconstruction, the Central People's government has managed to adjust most of the administrative regions according to their historical as well as geographical backgrounds. Although these changes in administrative regions have been reported by the press, a complete and accurate record of them is still lacking. Consequently, the general public, especially those who teach geography, are not very well informed of these changes, and have been misled by them. It is hoped, therefore, that this article will serve as a better reference.

5. Chahar

Ta-tung and Yu-yu hsiens in northern Shansi were placed under the jurisdiction of Chahar in 1949. Chahar turned over the jurisdiction of Ch'a-ha-erh Meng (察哈爾盟) to Inner Mongolia. The provincial seat is located in Kalgan.

6. Jehol

The area north of the Hsi-la-mu-lun Ho (西喇木倫河) in Chahar was transferred to Inner Mongolia, but districts in Hopeh north of the Great Wall, such as Hsing-lung and Ch'ing-lung (青龍) hsiens are now under the jurisdiction of Chahar.

7. Suiyuan

Suiyuan received Yu-shu-wan (榆樹灣) and other districts from Shansi, and T'ao-lo Hsien from Ningsia. The Great Wall and the Yellow River are the boundary lines between Suiyuan and Ningsia.

8. Inner Mongolian Autonomous Region

Inner Mongolia became autonomous on 5 May 1947, with its capital at Wulan-hao-t'e (烏蘭浩特). The administrative system consists of meng (provinces), ch'i (hsiens), nu-t'u-k'o-ch'-mu (ch'u or districts), and su-ai-li or ka-ch'a-chi-pa-ka (hsiangs or administrative villages). The total area of the Inner Mongolian Autonomous Region is equal to the former Hsingan Province or the combined area of the former Liacpeh Province, North Jehol (northern region of the Hsi-la-mu-lun Ho), and North Chahar (the Ch'a-ha-erh Meng). 10. Kiangsu

Kiangsu ceded six hsien including T'ung-shan and the city of Suchow to Shantung. It also ceded Hsiao, Tang-shan, and Chiang-p'u to the North Anhwei Administrative Office (行署), and Chu-jung, and Chiang-ning to Nanking. Since the Kiangsu Provincial People's government has not been established, the whole province of Kiangsu is being divided into the Su-pei (蘇北) (North Kiangsu) and the Su-nan (蘇南) (South Kiangsu) and governed by administrative offices. The Yangtze River is the dividing line.

11. Anhwei

Anhwei received three hsien, including Hsiao, from Kiangsu, and turned over Wu-yuan to Kiangsi. There is still no provincial people's government in Anhwei. The Yangtze River divides the province into Huan-nan (皖南) (South Anhwei) and Huan-pei (皖北) (North Anhwei), and both are governed by administrative offices.

12. Honan

Honan ceded 21 hsien including Chi and Wu-chih to Pingyuan Province and three hsien including Wu-an to Hopeh. Yung-ch'eng of northeastern Honan was ceded to the Huan-pei Administrative Office, but it was returned to Honan again in May 1950.

13. Hupeh

Wu-ch'ang, Han-yang, and Hankow cities, which were formerly under the jurisdiction of Hupeh Province, were formed into the municipality of Wuhan under the direct control of the Central and South China Regional District. (However, Hupeh's Provincial seat is still in Wu-ch'ang; the Han-yang Hsien seat is in the city of Han-yang, and the Wu-ch'ang Hsien seat which was moved to Jih-fang (蕪坊) has been moved back to its former site in the city of Wu-ch'ang.)

14. Kiangsi

Kiangsi received Wu-yuan Hsien from Anhwei, and Kuang-tse Hsien from Fukien.

II. CHANGES IN MUNICIPALITIES

Since the liberation, many municipal governments have been established to help cities assume their function of leading the entire country towards industrialization. Recently many changes have occurred. Some new municipal governments were re-established soon after they were abolished. On the basis of jurisdiction, all cities are included in these four categories: (1) chih-hsia-shih (直轄市) under the direct jurisdiction of the Central government or the regional district government; (2) chuan-ch'u-hsia-shih (專區轄市) under a provincial government; (3) hsing-shu-hsia-shih (行署轄市) under an administrative office; or (4) sheng-hsia-shih (省轄市) under a chuan-shu (專署) or a special office.
